Hutchison Invited to Present at Boeing's Employee Relations Conference

Woodbury, Connecticut, May 27, 2004 - It was announced that Cameron Hutchison, president and founder of Hutchison Group, Inc. has been invited to present at The Boeing Company's annual Employee Relations Conference. The conference is scheduled to be held in June at Boeing's Leadership Center in St. Louis, Missouri.

The Boeing Company's Director of Employee Relations, John Messman, described the conference. "Each year we bring together employee relations professionals from across Boeing for a conference to discuss issues pertinent to our current and future business outlook, and invite presentations from external experts to speak on special topics of interest. Our senior management team believes the employee relations issues associated with opportunities to accelerate change represents an important and timely topic. Having worked with Mr. Hutchison over the years, we regard him as a true expert in this field and are very pleased that he will be sharing his experience and insights with us at this year's conference." During the conference, Boeing President and CEO, Harry Stonecipher, will be sharing his views on key employee relations issues.

Commenting on his upcoming presentation, Hutchison said, "Certain business events represent an important and unique opportunity for the company to carefully examine their current situation and institute important changes which will help ensure the operation's long-term viability."

Founded in 1996, the Hutchison Group is an independent management-consulting firm, highly regarded for their ability to develop and implement innovative win-win labor-cost strategies during mergers, acquisitions, divestitures, and other business restructuring.
